The department plans to have the selected contractor prepare a number of Significant Reliance Placed key documents including plans needed to carry out disciplined processes, on Contractors to Define define additional business processes to be standardized, and propose a and Implement the TASC migration approach. However, DHS has not developed the necessary Program contractor oversight mechanisms to ensure that its significant reliance on contractors for the TASC program does not result in an unfavorable outcome. Work with other systems acquisition and implementation efforts have shown that placing too much reliance on contractors can result in systems efforts plagued with serious performance and management problems. For 17 example, DHS Office of Inspector General (OIG) recently reported that the U. S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) had not established adequate controls and effective oversight of contract workers responsible for providing Secure Border Initiative (SBI) program support services. Given the departments aggressive SBI program schedule and shortages of program managers and acquisition specialists, CBP relied on contractors to...
