Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Doctrine of Baptism: Mechanical or Spiritual Baptismal regeneration is not the question of the hour; it is rather around the other sacrament that, for the time being, discussion is most active. Yet, since Holy Baptism is the initiatory rite of our faith, the doctrine of Baptism must needs have to do with what is fundamental in the Christian system, what over our theory of that system may be. Fifty years ago, in the early days of the Oxford movement, baptismal regeneration was a burning question ; and it was duly threshed out in our ecclesiastical law courts, with results distinctly unfavourable to the Tractarian interpretation of our formularies. As, however, in this instance, the party of innovation was the aggressor, the adverse decision did not shake the position of its members in our Church; it only rendered it possible for those that took a different view of the Church s teaching still to find a place within her pale. The partial defeat carried with it the presage of a larger success; for it gave prominence and notoriety to a dogma which had much to commend it to those Churchmen who disliked the Evangelical Revival, chiefly bemuse of its insistence on the necessity of definite and conscious conversion.
