Excerpt: . . . CHAPTER II. SUNDAYS AND STORMS. Oh, tis the sun that maketh all things shine. Come what come may, Time and the hour run through the roughest day. All our Sundays were fine, said the captain to a friend of his in Wellington harbour. No matter what the rest of the week might have been, it was sure to clear up for Sunday. And so it was. There was only one exception, just to prove the rule, but even then we had glorious weather for part of the day. And all our excitements seemed to fall on a Sunday. We began regularly to look out for them! It was on a Sunday evening that we put off our second English pilot, and so cut the last tangible link with England; on a following Sunday that wonderful first whale paid us a neighbourly visit; on the fourth we were greeted by the captain with, If you want to see the line you must look two miles behind you. Yes; I thought I felt the ship give a jump. On the fifth we were summoned at six a. m. with the news, We are abreast of Trinidad (a desert island, and the only land we saw on our way). The scene was very beautiful. On the one side lay the St. Martin Vas rocks, behind which the sun was rising in true bridegroom robes; and on the other, Trinidad. Near as the island seemed--for we could see the verdure on...
